Here is a clear and emphatic acknowledge edgment of a right which the Radical leaders of this self-same party now deny to ten of the States composing this Union. Were the party then in carnest, or did they mean to practice a fraud upon the American people? Mr. Lincoln believed they were honest in this pledge to "main tain inviolate the rights of the States." and he pledged himself to execute this law of his party. In this same address he declared that "in contemplation of univer sal law, and of the constitution, the union of these States is perpetual," and pro pounded this question "If the United States be not a government proper, but tion of that body, but had not receipted an association of States in the nature of a contract merely, can it, as a con tract be peaceably unmade by less than all the parties who made "That the Comptroller be directed to is it? send Representatives to Congress and overn themselves conformably to the onstitution of the United States. He further illustrated his desire t restore the Union by issuing a proc amation on the8th of December, 1863 inviting the people of the seconded States to re-establish their State govrnments, and promising the Executive protection to the same, provided lowed, and the President impeached and these governments should be estab lished by as many as one-tenth of the > egal voters in the Presidential election of 1860. And he urged this "policy" upon the people of these States. That his whole course in this matter was sanctioned by the Republican party, we have evidence in their unqualified indorsement of his acts in the platform adopted b the Baltimore Convention. In the speec which Mr. Lincoln made on the 11th April, 1865, the last he ever made, and after the surrender of Gen. Lee, which was regarded as the virtual close of the war, he expressed himself in favor of the immediate restoration of the Southern States as follows: "We all agree that the seceeded State so-called, are out of their proper practical relation with the Union, and that the sole object of the government, civil and military, regard to those States, is to again ge them into that proper practical relation The forebodings of this correspondent | I believe it is not only possible, but in fact easier to do this without deciding, or even considering, whether these States have ever been out of the Union, than with it Finding themselves safely at home, it would be utterly immaterial whether they had react upon the country and bring forth a ever been abroad. It is dedicated to the Moderator, Ministers and Elders of that Church. We have not carefully read his chapters upon Sin, Sacrifice and the Atonement; but are not favorably impressed with his Dedi ention and Preface. We infer that Dr. Young is a dissenter from established truths—that he is a man of considerable parts, but not of strong mind-that he has gone upon a voyage of specutation with the best of motivas and in the most reverent mood; but, that he is tending rapidly towards Universalism, if not to something worse. The book, however, is worth reading by those whose business it is to watch the progress of heterodoxy, and the abuse of free-thinking. III. The Constitutional Convention; its History, Powers, and Modes of Proceedings. John Alex, Jameson: Chas. Scribner & Co., N. Y. It discusses, at length, original sovereignty, constitutions, conventions o amend constitutions, and submission of conitutions to the people. It contains a considerable amount of valuable information. We have not examined it with sufficient care to pronounce upon its merits; but from a glance are disposed to think that it is not equal to the " great argument" that it attempts.
